

Help yourself

- Try to avoid being alone, especially with your attacker, and be alert to your surroundings.
- Think about getting help to make a safety plan for yourself to avoid or escape a dangerous situation, especially if you know your attacker.
- Make sure you have a safe place to stay.
- Think about talking to a rape crisis center or other victim assistance counselor about what happened to you, so they can help you find a safe place to stay, give you counseling, and help you understand your options, like what medical staff will do during a "rape kit" exam or what might happen while going through the criminal justice system.

Help someone else

If you know someone who has been the victim of sexual assault, you can help them.

- If your friend tells you that she/he has been assaulted, remember that it is not her/his fault. Help them get to a safe place. Listen patiently and without judging her/him. Offer her/him your support and encouragement in getting help.
- Talk to the person and try to get them to talk to an adult and get medical attention. Offer to go with them. If your friend is badly injured, call 911. Encourage her/him to undergo a rape kit exam whether or not she/he intends to report the crime to police. She/he can always make the decision about whether or not to report the crime later.
- Report the assault to an adult you trust.

What is it?

For sexual activity to be okay, it must be consensual, which means that both people want it to happen. Sexual assault is when any person forces you to participate in a sexual act when you don't want to. This can include touching or penetrating the vagina, mouth or anus of the victim (often called rape), touching the penis of the victim, or forcing the victim to touch the attacker's vagina, penis, or anus. Touching can mean with a hand, finger, mouth, penis, or just about anything else, including objects.

It doesn't always take physical force to sexually assault a victim. Attackers can use threats or intimidation to make a victim feel afraid or unable to refuse them. It is also sexual assault if the victim is drunk, drugged, unconscious, too young (ages of consent differ from state to state), or mentally disabled to be legally able to agree to sexual contact.

Most victims are assaulted by someone they know: a friend, date, acquaintance, or boy/girlfriend. Dating or being sexually involved with someone does not ever give anyone the right to force you to have sexual contact when you don't want to. Even if you have had sex before, you have the right to say "NO" at any time. You are also allowed to change your mind at any time. Being sexually assaulted is never your fault.

Most perpetrators of sexual assault are male, whether the victim is female or male. Victims can be males or females of any age, race, social class, appearance, or sexual orientation. The majority of sexual assault victims are women and girls, but many men and boys are sexually assaulted too.

Sometimes people will use manipulation to get someone to give in to sex. They might say things like "If you really loved me, you'd do it" or "I'm going to tell everyone we did it anyway, so you might as well." This kind of behavior can be hurtful, though it often doesn't meet the legal definition of sexual assault, and is a sign of a controlling or emotionally abusive partner. The same is true of a partner who won't (or won't let you) use birth control when you want to. People who experience this kind of behavior can have similar reactions as people who have been sexually assaulted. If this is happening to you, consider seeking help.

If you are a victim of sexual assault, you might...

- Feel afraid, ashamed, angry, sad, lonely, betrayed or depressed
- Feel guilty and confused if you knew or had a relationship with the attacker, even though the assault was not your fault
- Feel like you have no friends or that your friends won't believe you
- Want to hurt someone else or yourself
- Feel like taking steps to defend yourself
- Feel helpless to stop the assault
- Feel hopeless that anything can be done
- Be afraid to go anywhere that the attacker might be
- Feel anxious all the time
- Feel bad about yourself or your body

You're not alone...

- Sexual assault is a widespread and under-reported crime.
- In 2005, there were 191, 670 reported incidents of rape and sexual assault.
- In 2005, there were 389,100 women and 78,180 men who were victimized by an intimate partner. These crimes accounted for 9 percent of all violent crime.
- Acquaintance rapes account for 93 percent of all rapes of teens. In 2001, more than 97,000 students between the ages of 18 and 24 were victims of alcohol-related sexual assault or date rape.
- A woman is more likely to be sexually assaulted by someone she knows than by a stranger.

Get Help

Being a victim of sexual assault is not your fault. Nothing in what you say, the way you look, where you are, or who you are with gives anyone else the right to hurt you. It does not matter if you are dating, or have ever been intimate with the person that sexually assaulted you. It does not give that person the right to force you to take part in sexual acts if you don't want to, even if you have had sexual activity of any sort with them in the past. It's still wrong.

- Seek immediate medical attention, preferably at an emergency room. Medical personnel are trained to perform a "rape kit" exam where they are able to gather evidence while examining the victim to help police and prosecutors find and charge the perpetrator. If you do want to report the assault it is important that you do not shower, change clothes, or clean up in any way before going to the hospital, in order not to disturb any evidence medical staff might be able to collect for the police. Sometimes this process can be easier if you have a trusted friend, adult, or victim advocate with you.
- Even if you don't want to report the assault to police right now, it is still important to have a medical exam to make sure you are ok. Sometimes people change their minds and want to report to the police later. Also, in addition to treating injuries, medical personnel can test for pregnancy and whether or not you may have been drugged. They can also give you drugs to reduce your chances of getting sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) or pregnant.
- Tell a trusted friend or adult. See if they can go with you to get medical treatment.
- Call a local victim service provider, like a rape crisis center. You may be able to find a number to call in your local phone book. If you cannot find one, call our Helpline, at 1-800-FYI-CALL.
- If you want to report the assault, call the police.
- If you choose to tell, you should know that in Indiana all adults are mandated reporters. This means they are legally required to report neglect or abuse to someone else, like the police or child protective services. Therefore, all teachers, counselors, doctors, social workers, coaches and activity leaders must report incidents of abuse or neglect that they are aware of.

If you want help deciding who to talk to, call our Helpline at 1-800-FYI-CALL, or an anonymous crisis line in your area. You might also want to talk to a trusted family member, a friend's parent, an adult neighbor or friend, an older sibling or cousin, or other experienced person who you trust.
